The Architecture of Attention

Information becomes abundant in a post-industrial society, while human attention remains the true limiting factor.

Every medium creates an invisible architecture that guides where the eye and the mind choose to rest.

Deep reading requires deliberate boundaries between focused thought and continuous notification.

Private knowledge grows when sources, notes, questions, and relationships remain traceable to evidence.